What is Classical Lutheran Education?

The next “C” in classical stands for cultural transmission. Our task is the passing on of the heritage of Western civilization. Whereas other forms of education may base lessons on current movies, television shows, or cartoon characters, in classical education we strive to hold and cherish the gifts of the past, grateful for all we have been given. To this end, we teach our children the stories and books every child should know, the historical events & people every child should know, and the geography, music, and art every child should know. In this way, we close educational gaps, and we cultivate a taste for that which is excellent. As we do this as Lutherans, we teach the humbling and certain historic and present promise of salvation in Christ alone.
